NLE Choppa's girlfriend Marissa Da'Nae recently suffered a miscarriage, and the rapper has released his new track "The Gender Reveal Song" in tribute to their unborn child.

Shared on Friday, the song sees the rapper get introspective as he expresses excitement about the arrival of their child. "Whatever you get just know that its a blessing/God don't give us what we want, he gives needs/Love her or love him/Every decision is made for them," he raps on the brief track, which Choppa confirmed was a tribute to the son they lost, Seven.

"I always wanted to make a song significant to gender reveals because I feel that's one of the most special parts of a pregnancy," he wrote on Instagram. "The curiosity of not knowing if it's a girl or a boy but trusting that god will give what's needed is beautiful. The first gender reveal I was a part of ever was one to remember God blessed me with a baby boy but a few months later decided to turn him into a angel to watch over me and my partner."

He added that he was inspired to share the song "for all the couples out there who have a gender reveal coming up in the future." He captioned the post with "#FOREVER7."

Da'Nae revealed she suffered a miscarriage last week in an emotional post on Instagram. "Losing our Son is so hard for me, I couldn't function. But he has pulled me through and I'm thankful to have you by my side and with me along this journey," she wrote. "Thank you Seven, for helping mommy grow more into a better person, pushing me into being more healthier and being the reason for me to continue to fight. I love you and I truly do appreciate the time we spent growing together and bonding."
