January 24, 2025 (Los Angeles, CA) – Today, rising rap surrealist B.U.G Antman returns with “Make Sense,” a hypnotic new single that sounds beamed in from an alternate-universe Atlanta. Listen HERE and stay tuned for the trippy video via Warner Records.

“I can’t even make this s--t make sense,” B.U.G Antman says at the start, floating through a gravityless soundscape of aqueous synth textures, chiming melody fragments, and wild echoing adlibs. But he’s perfectly at home on the dreamlike track: “Got a psycho bih like Harley Quinn / Money coming in, money coming in / We kick down your door then we runnin’ in.”

About the track B.U.G Antman shares, “Make Sense” exudes an unapologetic energy that combines confident self-expression and unwavering loyalty to the team. The lyrics emphasize a relentless pursuit of financial success and letting go of any external distractions. It’s direct, assertive, and laser-focused on growth, making it clear that anyone outside the team has no part in the journey.

The psychedelic song underscores the outsized charisma and otherworldly talent of B.U.G Antman, whom last November shared the vibrant single “Meltdown” — which came with an appropriately drippy video (watch HERE). The buzzing artist crawled his way to the top of the new Atlanta scene over the past few years, developing his singular vision across a series of thrilling projects: Goats On a Cliff (2020), Trap Infested (2023), and I See Colors (2023).

B.U.G Antman hit the gas heading into 2024 with his Bug EP, produced by Bakkwoods (SoFaygo, Lil Tecca, Ken Carson), and subsequent singles like “Phone on Private” and “Over Knees,” the latter of which he brought to the On the Radar Radio along with a couple of older actors who played the role of proud parents while he performed. Meanwhile, he continues to share boundary-pushing music directly with his fans (the “Colony”) on his various socials.

ABOUT B.U.G ANTMAN:

B.U.G Antman won't let anyone outwork him. Recently, the 24-year-old rapper from Atlanta has been going all in, developing an impressive portfolio of independent singles like "Over Knees" and "Phone On Private," which showcase his blend of straight-ahead rap bars with adventurous vocal inflections. Antman and his rapidly growing fanbase — which he lovingly calls his "colony" — are looking toward the future and aiming to leave a mark. The young B.U.G got his name because he preferred being outside catching critters to being parked on a couch playing video games. In high school, he discovered Lil Wayne and became obsessed with rap. After graduating, he decided to dedicate all his energy to making his own music. From 2020 through the beginning of 2024, he worked to establish his presence in Atlanta and online. Soon, the young MC began to establish his signature sound. He released music at a rapid clip, creating every day but growing far more selective with what he put into the world. Those early singles and the Bakkwoods-produced Bug EP drew the attention of Terrence "Snake" Hawkins, Veeze's label partner and manager, who implored Warner to ink B.U.G as soon as possible. Now, B.U.G Antman is itching to prove that he's ready to deliver his most thrilling album to date. And that he's in this for the long haul: "I am not letting this soak in. I'm just getting started."
