September 10, 2019 (Los Angeles, CA) - Vermont's own 99 Neighbors continues their hot streak with a new track and video titled “Fuck No” feat. Brasstracks and Philosophie, the latest installment of scorching music and visuals from the creative collective. Fresh on the heels of their performance at Made In America Festival, as well as their latest releases “Ripstick” and “Fake Pods,” 99 Neighbors’ “Fuck No” features members Swank and Sam Paulino with singer Philosophie as they smile through reflecting on toxic past-relationships.

Directed by Somba, the video keeps consistent with the group’s singular aesthetic and creative direction, positioning them in various environments via green screen effects. Check out the new song and video along with a quote from the group describing the inspiration behind the lyrics below.

“We wrote this song in the middle of winter when reminiscing about summertime and people from our past who slipped away. We all have people we tried to work things out with, but when somebody betrays your trust it’s a big turning point when you finally get to that stage where you can just tell them to fuck off. Somba wrote the hook in less than a minute, and Swank really felt like he related to the lyrics. With an ex-girlfriend in mind, he picked up where Somba left off. The goal for the song was to write a glow-up anthem people could sing along to at the top of their lungs.”
